British & US Embassies to hold symposium honoring women religious

Ahead of a virtual symposium on women religious on the frontlines, the US and British Ambassadors to the Holy See recall the tireless efforts of the Church's "unsung heroes."

By Vatican News

The British and US Embassies to the Holy See are teaming up to host a virtual symposium in honor of the many women religious who carry out the Church's mission to assist the poor and vulnerable. Entitled "Women Religious on the Frontlines", the one-hour, online event takes place on Tuesday, 23 June, at 11 AM.

'Unsung heroes'

Ahead of the symposium, Callista Gingrich, the US Ambassador to the Holy See, and Sally Axworthy, the British Ambassador to the Holy See, granted written interviews to Vatican News. Both praised the work of women religious.

Ambassador Gingrich called them "the unsung heroes of the Catholic Church" whose efforts often go "underappreciated and unnoticed."

"Like our US colleagues," said Ambassador Axworthy, "we deeply value the work of the women and men religious in caring for the most vulnerable members of society." They provide essential services for people around the world who have little other support, she added, "without blowing their own trumpet and often at great cost to themselves."

Ambassador Gingrich said religious sisters "truly are the educators, entrepreneurs, health care providers, and humanitarians on the frontlines in so many communities around the world."

Honoring Church's frontline workers

The symposium comes as many people face extreme difficulties brought on by the Covid-19 pandemic.

Consecrated religious continue to work tirelessly to help them through challenges like unemployment, poverty, and food insecurity, according to Ambassador Gingrich.

"Our symposium will emphasize this exact point,"

Embajadas británica y estadounidense celebrarán simposio en honor a mujeres religiosas

Antes de un simposio virtual sobre mujeres religiosas en primera línea, las embajadoras de Estados Unidos y Gran Bretaña ante la Santa Sede recuerdan los incansables esfuerzos de los "héroes anónimos" de la Iglesia.

Por Noticias del Vaticano

Las embajadas británica y estadounidense ante la Santa Sede se unen para organizar un simposio virtual en honor a las muchas religiosas que llevan a cabo la misión de la Iglesia de ayudar a los pobres y vulnerables. Titulado "Mujeres religiosas en primera línea", el evento en línea de una hora tiene lugar el martes 23 de junio a las 11 a.m.

'Héroes anónimos'

Antes del simposio, Callista Gingrich, embajadora de los Estados Unidos ante la Santa Sede, y Sally Axworthy, embajadora británica ante la Santa Sede, concedieron entrevistas escritas a Vatican News. Ambos elogiaron el trabajo de las mujeres religiosas.

El embajador Gingrich los llamó "los héroes anónimos de la Iglesia Católica", cuyos esfuerzos a menudo pasan por "subestimados e inadvertidos".

"Al igual que nuestros colegas de Estados Unidos", dijo el embajador Axworthy, "valoramos profundamente el trabajo de los religiosos y religiosas en el cuidado de los miembros más vulnerables de la sociedad". Proporcionan servicios esenciales para las personas de todo el mundo que tienen poco otro apoyo, agregó, "sin tocar su propia trompeta y, a menudo, a un gran costo para ellos mismos".

La embajadora Gingrich dijo que las hermanas religiosas "realmente son las educadoras, emprendedoras, proveedoras de atención médica y humanitarias en primera línea en tantas comunidades alrededor del mundo".

Honrando a los trabajadores de primera línea de la Iglesia

El simposio se produce cuando muchas personas enfrentan dificultades extremas provocadas por la pandemia de Covid-19.

Según el embajador Gingrich, los religiosos consagrados continúan trabajando incansablemente para ayudarlos a superar desafíos como el desempleo, la pobreza y la inseguridad alimentaria.

From Vatican News

she said. “Women religious are among the most effective and vital partners we have.” Sisters, she noted, “often have an unparalleled understanding of the social, economic, and political situations in their region.”

Ambassador Axworthy pointed out that sisters are “endlessly agile, spotting needs and responding to them”, as well as “resilient, staying in conflict zones for example.”

Invaluable experience

Tuesday’s virtual symposium will include a panel discussion featuring three women religious who have vast experience in promoting education and human rights, and assisting victims of human trafficking.

Ambassador Axworthy described their example of service at the heart of the Church. Sister Stan Therese Mumuni, Superior General Marian Sisters for Eucharistic Love, “rescues children born with birth defects in northern Ghana.”

Sister Imelda Poole, president of Religious in Europe Networking Against Trafficking and Exploitation, “helps trafficked women in Albania and throughout Europe.”

Sister Alicia Vacas, Provincial Superior of the Comboni Sisters in Jerusalem, “supported her fellow sisters during the Covid-19 pandemic in northern Italy, and her order, the Comboni Sisters, runs hospitals in challenging conditions in countries like Chad.”

These women religious, said Ambassador Axworthy, “represent the sisters’ ethos of selfless service to the people who need help most.”

Beacons of hope

Ambassador Gingrich recalled that religious sisters “are often the last beacons of hope for millions of people who otherwise would not have a voice.” Their service extends to “the displaced and the desperate,” she added, “in places where governments and humanitarian organizations struggle to operate.”

“Nuestro simposio enfatizará este punto exacto”, dijo. “Las mujeres religiosas se encuentran entre los socios más efectivos y vitales que tenemos”. Las hermanas, señaló, “a menudo tienen una comprensión incomparable de las situaciones sociales, económicas y políticas en su región”.

El embajador Axworthy señaló que las hermanas son “infinitamente ágiles, detectan necesidades y responden a ellas”, así como “resistentes, permanecen en zonas de conflicto, por ejemplo”.

Experiencia invaluable

El simposio virtual del martes incluirá una mesa redonda con tres mujeres religiosas que tienen una vasta experiencia en la promoción de la educación y los derechos humanos, y en ayudar a las víctimas de la trata de personas.

El embajador Axworthy describió su ejemplo de servicio en el corazón de la Iglesia. La hermana Stan Therese Mumuni, Superiora General de las Hermanas Marianas para el Amor Eucarístico, “rescata a los niños nacidos con defectos de nacimiento en el norte de Ghana”.

La hermana Imelda Poole, presidenta de Religiosos en Europa Networking Against Trafficking and Exploitation, “ayuda a las mujeres tratadas en Albania y en toda Europa”.

La Hermana Alicia Vacas, Superiora Provincial de las Hermanas Combonianas en Jerusalén, “apoyó a sus hermanas durante la pandemia Covid-19 en el norte de Italia, y su orden, las Hermanas Combonianas, administra hospitales en condiciones difíciles en países como Chad”.

Estas religiosas, dijo el embajador Axworthy, “representan el espíritu de servicio desinteresado de las hermanas a las personas que más necesitan ayuda”.

Balizas de esperanza

El embajador Gingrich recordó que las hermanas religiosas “son a menudo los últimos faros de esperanza para millones de personas que de otra forma no tendrían voz”. Su servicio se extiende a “los desplazados y los desesperados”, agregó, “en lugares donde los gobiernos y las organizaciones humanitarias luchan por operar”.
